English Wines

The English wine industry is a comparative young upstart compared to its continental cousins. However, with advances in technology and wine makers unperturbed by the inclement weather some quality wines are now being produced. Sparkling wine has become a real forte for the industry and Bolney Estate is undoubtedly one of the leading producers of still wine in the country.

BURGUNDIAN WHITES

Arguably the best region for white wines in the world, Burgundy is certainly one of the most famous. All the whites in this section are made with Chardonnay, yet all of them are different in style, showing the incredible diversity of the Burgundian landscape. Crisp dry unoaked Chablis is made in the north, while much rounder, richer full-bodied whites are made in the Villages of Chassagne, Puligny and Meursault. These villages produce some of the most sought-after white wine in the world.

GERMAN WHITES

Germany is famed for its Riesling and rightly so. It is potentially the world's most varied grape, producing the rich, slightly sweet Spätlese and the off-dry medium Kabinett. Some would argue that these are the greatest whites in the world and Riesling the most noble variety.

AUSTRIAN WHITE

Historically much maligned, the Austrian wine industry is now producing beautiful wines, right up there with the best the rest of Europe has to offer. The most famous native variety is Grüner Veltliner producing a classic dry white, floral and mineral with a hint of spice.

Red Wines of The World

ITALIAN REDS

Italy is the world's largest producer of wine and enjoys huge success with both its own native grape varieties as well as international varieties such as Cabernet Sauvignon. In the north the Piedmont is home to the noble Nebbiolo grape and grown in Barolo and Barbaresco to make 'the wine of kings'. In Tuscany, Sangiovese makes wonderful Chiantis and is also blended with Cabernet to make rich and sumptuous 'Super-Tuscans'; wines that challenge the best Bordeaux has to offer. Further South, grape varieties like Nero d'Avola make wonderful approachable easy drinking reds.
